

— Credibility

Life is extremely tough for people who are not taken seriously.

The following observations may be useful to you.

Notice:

The longer you take to apply an effective action, the less they will believe you.

The more you declare how honest you are, the less they will believe you.

The more silent you are during turbulent times, the less they will believe you.

The more uncertain you act, the less they will believe you.

The more comfort choices you rationalize, the less they will believe you.

The more excuses you make for yourself, the less they will believe you.

The more helpless you act, the less they will believe you.

The more virtue signaling you engage in, the less they will believe you.

The more outrage you put forth, the less they will believe you.

The more you smile for no real reason, the less they will believe you.

The longer you take to make up your mind, the less they will believe you.

The more you are unwilling to make solid commitments, the less they will believe you.

The more triggered you get when dealing with others, the less they will believe you.

The more agreements you break with others, the less they will believe you.

The longer it takes you to get a result, the less they will believe you.

The more artificially constructed closeness you participate in, the less they will believe you.

The more you try to convince someone of your ideology, the less they will believe you.

The more incongruent your speaking, the less they will believe you.

The more scattered you show up, the less they will believe you.

The more you assert how much you love someone, the less they will believe you.

— Dusan Djukich