

— People who won't say yes but can't say no

People who won't commit one way or the other are a waste of your time and life.

They usually hide behind a sincere, well-meaning act.

They usually want to endlessly think about things before making a decision.

They are not just lame.

They are damaging.

It's best to discard them.

I didn't say to be mean to them.

I said discard them.

I didn't say to talk down to them.

I said discard them.

I didn't say to try to reason with them.

I said discard them.

You will just get an ongoing riot in your own mind if you remain connected to them.

A nice, polite, virtue signaling personality is nothing more than a manipulative sham to extract resources and support.

Now, before you eye-rolling super tolerant moralists start with your judgmental nonsense, consider the following:

"So, because you are lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spit you from my mouth."

- Revelations 3:16

There is no written rule that says you must put up with weak-ass behaviors.

What I am stating here is nothing new.

It has been common knowledge since ancient times.

The bottom line is, "When people waste your time they also waste your life."

Focus on adding value to people's lives and you will never lack for friends and resources.

And raise your standards with regards to who and what you will tolerate in your own life.

Time matters.

Life matters.
