

— Motivation vs. discipline

Motivation is worthless without doing necessary required actions.

Motivation is worthless if you're incompetent.

Motivation is worthless without a sincere willingness to win.

Motivation is worthless if you're low on realism.

Motivation is worthless if you have a low stress tolerance.

Motivation is worthless if you're unaware of your public identity.

If you honestly confront the need for motivation, it's just unnecessary in the first place.

What is required is discipline.

If you're disciplined, it doesn't matter if you're motivated or not.

Discipline is what creates.

Discipline is what gets things done.

Motivation is a feeling that comes and goes.

People often seek motivation to do things that they don't want to do.

It rarely works.

Discipline is simply saying what you will do and backing it up with integrity.

Discipline has no need for feelings.

Discipline almost always works.

— Dusan Djukich

A handwritten signature in yellow ink, reading 'Dusan Djukich'. The signature is fluid and cursive, with a long, sweeping underline that extends to the right.